

“On our road to uplift rural lives and to create self-sustaining communities, to transform villagers’ lives we have tied up with various government agencies” says Rumali Chakma, cultural secretary of the group. The society has forged a partnership with various institutions and government departments like agriculture department, Krishi Vigyan Kendra (KVK), animal resources development department, fisheries and health department to ensure that village folks have a firm sense of project ownership of various government schemes.

There are many schemes run by the state government to uplift rural lives but most of the schemes are not utilized properly due to lack of information. Now, the group is making sure that every villager is using all the government schemes properly and gets benefited.

Saran Chakma, a youth leader of the group says that they have achieved a lot and have more plans to expand their agricultural projects and educational projects with the help of the state government for the villagers under Debipur ADC Village.

The society has managed to take one lake on lease for fish farming from one of the villagers and has raised its own banana garden in 4 acre of land and also cultivates rice and vegetables like cabbage, pumpkin, chilies etc. on its own. The society also runs one rice mill for the villagers and provides power tiller machine to the framers which they have received from the agriculture and farmers’ welfare department.

Now the youths of the society are also planning to put their hands at rearing ducks and chickens and looking forward to assistance from the government. They have also sought assistance from the youth affairs and sports department for financial support for taking up development activities in the concerned field.

The Dharmangkur Youth Society is changing the lives of rural people through dedication and commitment. It is not just their initiative to facilitate various incentives and financial support from different authorities, but also their efforts to show the right direction by keeping the local community informed and motivated that set them apart from the lot. Their journey is not for short-term financial benefits but towards securing a sustainable community.
